

Franklyn Griffiths is a professor emeritus of political science and George Ignatieff Chair Emeritus of Peace and Conflict Studies at the University of Toronto. His research and policy interests centre on the Arctic and international security affairs, particularly nuclear arms control and the potential for practices of civility to address problems of violence in ways that conventional security policy cannot. He is the author of A Northern Foreign Policy (1979), Arctic Alternatives: Civility or Militarism in the Circumpolar North (1992), and Strong and Free: Canada and the New Sovereignty (1997); he is also the editor of Politics of the Northwest Passage (1987). Recently, he published an article entitled "Camels in the Arctic? Field Notes on the Reception of Climate Change among Canada's Inuit" in The Walrus. Mr. Griffiths has been director of the Centre for Russian and East European Studies at the University of Toronto, senior policy advisor for the Office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, visiting professor at Stanford University and visiting scholar at Cambridge University's Scott Polar Research Institute.